Linnaeus' Hammarby

Carl Linnaeus' summer residence. Carl Linnaeus bought this small manor in 1758 as a summer residence for his family, away from the unhealthy streets of Uppsala. He liked to receive his "disciples" and other visitors at Hammarby, where he introduced plants from all over the world and established a small museum for his extensive natural history collections. After Linnaeus' death in 1778 his wife Sara Lisa remained at Hammarby for many years together with two of their daughters. The Swedish State bought the houses and the park from his descendants in 1879 and it is now managed by Uppsala University. The estate lies embedded in a Cultural Heritage Reserve, where the Uppsala County Council has recreated an 18th century agricultural landscape with forest, fields, grazing paddocks, a cabbage field and a hop garden. Today, few Swedish manor-houses preserve such an authentic milieu. It reflects the private life of Linnaeus as well as his scientific work.

EUROPEAN HERITAGE HEADS FORUM

22 -24 May 2019
SWEDEN

Dear Colleagues, Kära kollegor!

It is a great pleasure and privilege to welcome you all to Sweden, Stockholm, and the 14th European Heritage Heads Forum! Over the last seven years I have come to treasure the EHHF annual meetings where friends and colleagues from across Europe gather to share ideas, experience and information – and where we have a chance to pick up and continue conversations. This year we have the opportunity to welcome some new colleagues, who will no doubt contribute to the pleasant and fruitful atmosphere of the Forum.

We live in an exciting time of flux and friction, when the fabric of society is constantly being renegotiated. It is important that we, as heads of heritage agencies, look at our practice in a wider perspective: how can we support an open and inclusive society and how can we make sure to offer a wide variety of heritage for everyone to enjoy and explore? These are central questions in today's heritage management.

But we must not altogether lose ourselves in furrow-browed discussions about the future of heritage in society – we will also look at some of the historic sites and environments that continue to inspire our work and remind us of the lives, privations and achievements of those who came before us. For this reason, we have engaged colleagues from different aspects of Swedish heritage management to assist us in rediscovering the historic environment from the Iron Age to today.

It is a full programme, but in Sweden we keep busy to stay warm; in this way we hope you will be fuelled by new energy and ideas!

Lars Amréus,
Director General
Swedish National Heritage Board
